

What is the FED Buying? Tangible or Intangible?

Applying facts known, if the FED is buying tangible obligations at the rate of $40 Billion a month or if for an extended period of time $480 Billion a year. Such action of purchasing tangibles would be seen in a few years as being as successful as the last FED's action to sustain the tangible markets. Too little too late to conceal the crime of all time.

Considering the current financial value of the housing crisis with Credit Default Swaps & Credit Default Obligation(s) being equal, appears the FED would need to purchase Intangible Obligations upwards and perhaps beyond ten fold the value of Tangible Obligations, but such action does not aid the tangible market. Such purchase of Intangible Obligation(s) at best allows perpetuating the crime, kick the can, into the future. Is such kicking the can down the road a willful attempt to allow the statute of limitations to expire?

As the United States Supreme Court has opined, so long as fraud remains filed of record, the statute of limitations resets the clock everyday that such fraud remains in the record. If those within the government are willfully delaying actions in hopes the statute of limitations expire, then each of those individuals has failed this country, their oath and potentially violated many a citizen's civil rights.

The record of events reveal that the current presidential administration has not publicly acknowledged criminal pursuit of wrong doers but if such action is under way, the public requires and must be informed within the next 14 days.

Failure to admit or avoid admitting may work in a court of law but not in the court of world opinion, Guilty by Omission!!!
